February 10- March 13, 2016

Opening Reception: Saturday, February 13, 6-8 PM

Steven Harvey Fine Art Projects is proud to present “Real States,” a three-person exhibition with Tom Burckhardt, Clare Grill, and Sangram Majumdar. The exhibition will include three to five pieces by each artist, New York-based friends and colleagues.

The three artists in this exhibition all make paintings that engage abstract or abstracted forms on the armature of an implied grid. However, these forms and shapes are simultaneously allowed to fall away from any such structure. This “on-grid / off-grid” tension permeates the work of all three painters.

In Majumdar’s paintings, the forms are derived from observed sources the artist arranges and constructs. The structure, in some of these works, originates from a digital printout of an early video game interior, layered with images of gardens in Indian miniature paintings, or the remains of cardboard cutouts from his larger paintings. The resulting paintings hint at something known, but seen here out of context. They evoke simultaneity, the feeling of being in two places at once. Gesture and felt experience are recognizable: embedded in the fragments, even as the artist plays with figure-ground reversal.

Clare Grill's paintings are not planned, but rather found through repeated sanding, rubbing, and dragging of paint over linen. Antique embroidery samplers--needlepoint work made by young girls to present their craftwork skills to potential employers--often serve as an entry point. Grill is drawn to the tedious, tiny stitches that comprise these worn artifacts. Each of her paintings operates within its own tight chromatic and tonal range, the result of working in low, raking-light, on a tabletop. The subtle forms seen on and below the surface inform the resultant imagery. Her paintings testify to human touch and the subtle variations that inform our daily experiences, often unnoticed and unacknowledged.

Burckhardt uses humor to pull back from the logic of abstract forms within a grid. A maximalist (while the other two artists investigate traces, shadows, and missing information), Burckhardt allows suggestive forms to breed and layer. Some works are painted on cast plastic (trompel'œil canvases), made from the artist’s molds. They play with our constructed hierarchies of the unique work of art and tendency to fetishize material. They are wild but controlled: combining colors and forms that invoke a range of visual culture: art historical images, banal patterning, and mechanistic animation.
